'like' The election

Where do millennials get election info? Where else?

By Leonor Vivanco

REDEYE

As the 2012 presidential race approaches, candidates might want to consider ramping up their social networking as part of their game plan to target young voters.

A new poll of 3,000 Americans ages 18-29 by Harvard's Institute of Politics at the John F. Kennedy School of Government found 27 percent of millennials believe such tools make more of a political impact compared to in-person advocacy.

Only 16 percent said it made less of an impact. The poll, conducted between Feb. 11 and March 2, has a 2.4 percent margin of error.

Young adults are spending more time online and have more experience with social media than in-person advocacy, polling director John Della Volpe said. One explanation for that is that candidates spend less time interacting with students in person because of the perception that they vote less often than older voters, said Trey Grayson, institute director and former Kentucky Secretary of State.

President Obama's 2008 campaign played out as many of these social media trends unfolded. His successful campaign reached out to young voters on Facebook, Twitter, MySpace, email, YouTube, texts and his own website. In 2008, youth voter turnout increased two percentage points—to 51 percent—compared to the 2004 election.

Now, Obama—who has a 55 percent approval rating among millennials—is rumored to be announcing his re-election bid via text message and an online video. Most recently, former Minnesota governor Tim Pawlenty this month announced a presidential exploratory committee in a video posted on YouTube and Facebook.

When it comes to Facebook, the poll showed 29 percent have "liked" a political issue and 24 percent have "liked" a political candidate. Nearly a quarter currently share their political views in their profiles. And 21 percent have used their Facebook status to advocate for a political position.

Sorry, I don't want to join your club

This week, I've been captured at least three different times by individuals I don't know from Adam.

Don't call the law just yet.

Luckily, these kidnappers are of the virtual variety.

Each one is the administrator of a Facebook group who evidently decided that if members wouldn't come to them, they would come to members by adding people without their consent.

This ill-advised Facebook function isn't new. It arrived as part of an overhaul last winter, according to mashable.com.

But recently, it's become a social-networking nuisance like people who tweet every five minutes, in the spirit of "Seinfeld," about nothing.

I've noticed a higher level of aggression and randomness with the adding process. When I put up a status on the subject, approximately 36 Facebook friends immediately agreed that grabby groups were obnoxious.

Instead of using the group setting to gather real friends around a shared interest like, I dunno, the local restaurant scene, users are being recruited by groups with topics that range from puzzling to profane.

In my case, since I use my page for professional reasons, I don't even know the folks behind these group grabs or, in some cases, why they have a group at all.

For example, "Goodfellas" is one of my favorite films of all time, but I have no particular affinity for one of its lines "[Bleep] You, Pay Me." That didn't stop me from being snatched up by a group of the same name sometime Monday night.

Just as I began to feel safe again, I woke up to find that "FYI," a group with a puzzling purpose, had pulled me in. After heading to my email to delete its numerous notifications, I was happy to find that another abductee had posted on the wall: "FYI, I don't want to be in here."

Boom, roasted.

Yeah, yeah, I know full well how to leverage "leave group," but why should I keep having to do that?

It's a question even social media expert Courtney Hunt couldn't answer.

Hunt, who studies social media trends and online etiquette as the founder of Renaissance Strategic Solutions, said that social networking is dominated by an opt-in philosophy. Adding members to anything without their consent or stated interest goes against that grain.

"I'm surprised they haven't revisited this," Hunt, who is based in the South Loop, said of Facebook. "On Twitter, you choose to follow. On Facebook, you choose to connect. Why should the groups be any different?"

They shouldn't.

Maybe I will head over to Facebook and found "Stop the Group Grabbing." I'll have to resist the urge to draft my former kidnappers as members.

2 ON-DUTY COPS HIT WITH ALLEGATIONS OF SEXUAL ASSAULT

Chicago Tribune

Two Chicago police officers are under criminal investigation amid explosive allegations they played strip poker with a young woman and sexually assaulted her in her Far North Side apartment while on duty early Wednesday.

THE ACCUSED

Police Department records show both officers are 38 and were hired in 2001. They've worked for at least the past three years in the Town Hall District, which encompasses parts of Lincoln Park, Lakeview and Uptown.

At a news conference, an outraged Terry Hillard, the interim police superintendent, noted he is a father before calling the officers' conduct "inappropriate. You just can't justify it." He referred to the allegations as "heinous criminal activity."

Hillard said at least one of the officers allegedly sexually assaulted the woman. The officers were arrested later Wednesday and questioned at Belmont Area headquarters with legal counsel present before being released without charges.

The criminal inquiry continues as investigators collect "evidence and forensics," Hillard said. Cook County prosecutors have been notified about the allegations. In the meantime, the 10-year veterans were relieved of police powers and put on administrative duty, he said.

The alleged sexual assault took place at the woman's Rogers Park apartment, several miles from the Town Hall District, where the two officers were assigned to work patrol duties on the overnight shift.

The uniformed officers, driving a marked police SUV, had offered the 22-year-old woman a ride as she walked near Wrigley Field, crying and upset after drinking and arguing with a male friend, according to a police report.

According to the report, the woman said she accepted, and while they were en route to her residence, she had sex with one officer in a passenger seat.

At her apartment, the three of them played strip poker, and she again had sex with one of the officers.

But she told police she began to feel intimidated and was afraid to refuse their sexual advances, according to the report. She said she pounded on the wall to get her neighbor's attention and later got up and ran screaming out of the apartment.

A neighbor saw her and called police about 3 a.m. The woman was treated at St. Francis Hospital in Evanston.

Police release sketch of Fullerton 'L' suspect

Chicago Tribune

Chicago police released a sketch Thursday of a man wanted for pushing a 68-year-old woman to her death after he robbed a commuter of her iPhone at the Fullerton Avenue "L" station.

At a press conference at the Lincoln Park station, Cmdr. Gary Yamashiroya said police have received dozens of leads and are hoping more witnesses will come forward with the release of the sketch. He said police also are studying surveillance video.

"We're going to treat this as seriously as any homicide," he told reporters.

Police said the suspect struggled with the commuter over her iPhone, fled amid the rush-hour crowd and pushed Sally Katona-King as she headed up the stairs to the train, knocking her to the steps. She died Tuesday of multiple injuries.

Police have "tightened up the description" of their suspect, Yamashiroya said.

The man is described as black, between 17 and 25, 5 feet 11 inches to 6 feet 4 inches tall. He weighs between 170 and 220 pounds and was last seen wearing blue jeans, a black hat and black jacket with vertical writing or graphics down the center.

Drivers of horse-drawn carriages now must stop and clean up the street whenever their horses urinate. TRIBUNE FILE

Teeing off on peeing law

WGN

A new Chicago law requires drivers of horse-drawn carriages to stop and clean up when a horse urinates on the street.

The rule went into effect Thursday.

One carriage owner is calling the new rule, which requires carriage drivers to spray the street immediately after the horse urinates, nonsensical.

"It is unsafe and unrealistic to expect carriage drivers in busy traffic to stop and either get off the carriage and pour liquid or water ... or lean over and try to do it," says Dan Sampson, director of Noble Horse.

Ald. Brendan Reilly (42nd) is the force behind the rule, claiming residents complained to him about the lingering stench of horse urine on many streets in his ward.

"The horse-drawn carriage industry unfortunately has an issue with smells at certain intersections where the horses are urinating," Reilly told WGN.

"When a resident calls for service, a taxpayer-funded crew shows up to apply deodorizing solution to that corner.

"The city's in a budget crisis. I think the industry needs to take care of their mess."

Facebook, Jolly Ranchers and a public school uproar

Chicago Tribune

Chicago Public Schools said a teacher showed poor judgment posting photos of a student on her Facebook page, leading to the child being mocked for her hairstyle on picture day.

The 7-year-old, a student at Overton Elementary School, turned up for photo day last week with Jolly Rancher candies tied in her braids. Her computer teacher allegedly took photos of the child and posted them on her profile where people mocked the hairstyle.

The child's mom complained to the principal, CPS spokeswoman Monique Bond said.

Lucinda Williams said her daughter saw a picture of a girl wearing Jolly Rancher candies at the end of her braids and begged her mom to give her the hairstyle. Her mother agreed but said she'd do it on picture day, March 24.

That day Williams, a hairdresser, attached the candies to the braids using elastic bands.

The teacher asked the girl to put her hair over her face and then took pictures. That night, another parent, whose child is the teacher's friend on Facebook, let Williams know that the girl's photo was on the teacher's page and people were mocking the hairstyle.

Williams notified the school principal. The teacher apologized and said she took down the photos, but Williams says it's not enough. Her lawyer is preparing a lawsuit against CPS.

"What bothers me is that she still hasn't apologized to my baby," Williams said. "No child should have to go to school to be bullied by their teacher."

Walk this way—to work, at least

Friday is Walk to Work Day, where Chicagoans are encouraged to ditch the CTA and Metra in favor of their own two feet. The event is championed by the Active Transportation Alliance, a Chicagoland biking advocacy group.

Parking ban melts on city streets

Friday marks the end of the city's winter overnight parking ban for 107 miles of Chicago's arterial streets. It also marks the start of street-sweeping season. Be on the lookout for parking restrictions posted the day before cleanings.

Go ahead, take your water bottle to O'Hare

By Georgia Garvey

REDEYE

Anyone who's ever had to dump out a full bottle of water in the airport security line, rejoice.

New high-tech machines at O'Hare allow travelers to refill bottles faster than at a regular fountain. The machines, called Elkay EZH2Os, feature filtered water, ultra-speedy bottle filling and sensor activation.

Similar fountains could be on the way at Midway, according to Paul McLafferty, Elkay sales representative for Chicago. He said O'Hare began testing a fountain in Terminal 2 about a year ago and added a second one about six months ago.

Schools including Northwestern University, DePaul University, the University of Chicago and Harper College already have the bottle-filling stations, according to Elkay.

"We feel we've hit a home run," McLafferty said. "It's our attempt ... to save plastic bottles going into our landfills."

Gaelen Bell, a representative from Elkay, said the machine has sensor-prompted filling and automatic shutoff. The fountains fill a bottle three times faster than a standard fountain, she said. The machine also shows a running total of how many bottles of water have been prevented from entering landfills as a result of the fountain's use.

One filter on the water fountain prevents the use of 24,000 16-ounce plastic water bottles, Bell said.

Missing cobra is sssafe and sssound

5 NEW YORK A deadly Egyptian cobra, which sustained interest on Twitter this week, has been found alive after it went missing from a New York City zoo.

"As you can imagine, we are delighted to report that the snake has been found alive and well," Bronx Zoo Director Jim Breheny said Thursday.

Zoo officials conducted around-the-clock searches for the 20-inch reptile, he said.

Breheny said the cobra had sought out a secure hiding spot within the holding areas of the zoo's reptile house—a complex environment with pumps, motors, and other mechanical systems.

But it was lured out after zoo officials sprinkled wood shavings from exhibit beds across areas where they guessed the cobra was hiding. "It was the scent of rodents [on the wood clippings] that we hoped would bring her out," Breheny added.

SWEET TWEETS

After launching on Monday, the anonymous @BronxZoosCobra Twitter feed had amassed nearly 200,000 followers by Thursday. Some sample tweets:

» "City may not sleep, but I'm ready to. Ooh a chimney! I bet you bragged to your friends about having a working fireplace in NYC. Hi roomie."
» "Just FYI, I've had it with Samuel L. Jackson too."

"The key strategy here was patience," he said in a prepared statement.

The snake went missing Saturday from an off-exhibit enclosure, prompting the zoo to close the reptile house.

Officials had earlier cautioned that it might take days or even weeks before the snake was found and urged the public not to panic, saying the cobra likely was contained within the building.

A VIRTUAL CERTAINTY

IS THIS THE YEAR CHICAGO OWNS THE WORLD SERIES? WE CAN HOPE

By Ryan Smith

FOR REDEYE

Chicago's attention may have been distracted by the recent success of the Bulls, Bears and Blackhawks, but baseball is about to get big again.

The White Sox and Cubs will lose in their respective league championship series in this year's playoffs, narrowly missing an all-Chicago World Series. At least, that's according to a simulation of the Cubs and Sox seasons conducted by RedEye using the franchise mode on "MLB 2K11" for Xbox 360. Let's look into the virtual crystal ball and see what else the season has in store. RYAN SMITH IS A REDEYE SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR.

APRIL

The Cubs are sluggish at the start and get swept by lowly Pittsburgh on opening weekend. It gets worse when Ryan Dempster is put on the 30-day disabled list with torn elbow cartilage. The South Siders, however, put a smile on Ozzie Guillen's face by rolling to a 19-9 start for the best record in the American League.

MAY

Remember when we heard all the stories in the offseason that Carlos Zambrano was such a changed man that he's practically Gandhi now? So much for that. After his third bad start in a row, the Cubs send Big Z to Triple-A Iowa. But Zambrano's demotion actually seems to spark the Cubs, who finish the month only two games out of first place.

JUNE

The good news for the Sox? Shortstop Alexei Ramirez is playing like an All-Star. The bad news? He suffers a fractured shin and will miss almost two months. Meanwhile, the torn cartilage thing seems to be contagious with the Cubs. The other Ramirez—Aramis—will miss two months with the same injury that put Dempster out. Meanwhile, Toronto tries to trade Juan Rivera and Corey Patterson to the Cubs for Marlon Byrd and Tyler Colvin. Sorry, Blue Jays, we already had to suffer with Patterson for several years. You keep him.

2011 PROJECTED STATS

JULY

Alexei Ramirez garners 1.8 million votes and gets a spot on the AL All-Star team, but his bum leg means he won't play in the game. Aramis Ramirez and Geovany Soto, meanwhile, finish second in the voting at their respective positions for the National League and make brief appearances in the Midsummer Classic.

AUGUST

The Sox are cruising to the AL Central title because the rest of the division is below .500, including the shockingly bad Minnesota Twins, who are mired in last place. Paul Konerko sits because of a stiff groin, while the rest of the clubhouse giggles when told of the nature of the injury. The Cubs are 13 games back of Milwaukee in the NL Central but are in the thick of the wild-card race with St. Louis and Colorado.

SEPTEMBER

The Sox finish with a 92-70 record, good for third best in the league and 13 games better than surprising Kansas City. The North Siders, meanwhile, squeak into the wild-card spot, edging out the Rockies by two games.

OCTOBER

The Cubs and Sox get the entire city excited about a Red Line World Series by winning in the first round of the playoffs. The Cubs down Atlanta in four games and the White Sox upset Boston in four. But sorry, Chicago, the curse is strong in this one. The Cubs get swept by the Brewers in the NLCS and the Sox lose in five games to the Yankees.

New summer, same disaster

Baseball season is upon us. Hooray.

You see, I'm already tired. I have seen all this, and I'll sum up: Summer reruns. Nonetheless, here's a quick take on what to look for this season.

The Cubs. Year 2 of new ownership. So far, fans notice no changes.

I mean, the team releases Carlos Silva because he's an unproductive hot-head. Hmm. I have to wonder why Carlos Zambrano is still around. Oh yeah, he makes more money. Huh?

The team will be so bad; I predict the unthinkable will happen. Fans, out of boredom, will sit up and notice that Wrigley, for all its charms, is kind of a dump.

Here's a smart move: The Cubs have announced some street festivals around the ballpark throughout the summer.

Hallelujah, I say. Wrigley Field is so much more enjoyable when you don't have to go inside and watch the team. Stay outside, drink yourself into oblivion and avoid the disappointment.

No, seriously. This is a .500 team without the $5 million manager. We have a first baseman who hit under .200 last year. Look at the roster. There's no one to get excited about. Unless, of course, the 35-year-old Alfonso Soriano excites you. Wow. You thought he was mediocre when he was 32. Just you wait!

All right, enough. To the South Side. I'm more lenient, but I predict Jake Peavy, when he does come back, will be lights out for his first three starts. Then his arm falls off.

Mark Buehrle actually talks himself into retirement—sometime around August.

The team itself, as built, isn't bad. Good news: No more Mark Teahen as the starting third baseman. A .270 hitter is just that. Bad news: Who's Brent Morel? A career .231 hitter. I give up.

Welcome, Adam Dunn. You're like Jim Thome, but younger. Just as slow, however. So we can expect tons of home runs. This formula worked wonders from 2006-09, when we won one division title and couldn't beat the Twins.

Prediction: We'll beat everyone. Except the Twins.

Like I said. You've seen both acts before.

WHO'S ON SECOND?

Cubs manager Mike Quade inserted rookie Darwin Barney into the lineup at second base for Friday's Opening Day game against Pittsburgh. "There are a lot of guys who had good camps," Quade said. "He and [Jeff] Baker had great camps. I think they both earned a chance to play. Barring something crazy, 'Bake' will play against the left-hander the second day."

EAT LIKE YOU'RE AT THE PARK

This is not, repeat, not an April Fool's joke. In honor of Opening Day (Friday for the Cubs, Thursday for the Sox), four Johnny Rockets locations will offer $1 Chicago-style hot dogs (regularly $2.49) all day April 1 and 7. Have one, have four. There's no official limit.

OZZIE'S QUOTE OF THE DAY

"Very stupid to play in Cleveland right now. Nothing against Cleveland. We expect that. ... A couple of years ago they canceled like 30 games here. [But] we are here, and we have to play through snow."

5 BURNING QUESTIONS FACING THE SOX

Even American League contenders have issues to address throughout the season. Here are five questions facing the White Sox entering 2011.

TRIBUNE

Are slow starts history?

The Sox lost nine of their first 13 games in 2010 and were 9 1/2 games out of first place June 8. In 2009 they were seven games below .500 in mid-May. Each season, they rallied to move into at least a share of the AL Central lead by July, only to fade quickly from contention. Entering his fourth season, shortstop Alexei Ramirez should be better equipped to improve on his career .200 batting average in April. With his contract no longer an issue, A.J. Pierzynski should make a major improvement from his .169 mark last April.

Can they rattle rivals?

The Sox were 32-40 against the AL Central last season, including a 16-20 mark at home and a 5-13 mark against division champion Minnesota. They also failed to dominate division doormats Cleveland and Kansas City, their first two opponents in 2011.

Taking the fifth?

If Phil Humber comes anywhere close to fulfilling the potential forecast for him when the N.Y. Mets drafted him third overall in 2004, the Sox should be thrilled. They'll need at least a mediocre effort from the fifth-starter spot while Jake Peavy rehabs his injured shoulder.

Strong closing argument?

Left-hander Matt Thornton earned the closer's role and has the security of being under contract for the next three seasons. He will give the Sox stability if he can stay productive and healthy.

Too hot for a rookie?

Rookie third baseman Brent Morel's history, dating to Cal Poly-San Luis Obispo, shows he overcomes slow starts with gradual improvement. If he can be productive from the No. 9 spot in the lineup, it would allow Omar Vizquel to spell shortstop Ramirez and second baseman Gordon Beckham and not devote most of his time at third, as he did last year.

Wrigley Field

5 BURNING QUESTIONS FACING THE CUBS

The most glaring fact about the 2011 Cubs is everyone has something to prove. Here are five questions that will be answered sooner or later.

Will Soriano answer his critics?

Alfonso Soriano hit 24 home runs last year with 40 doubles in 147 games, his most since 2006 in Washington. But because of his gargantuan salary and subpar defense, some dismiss him as a mediocre player. If he's healthy again, Soriano should be able to improve on his .258 average and drive in more runs.

Is Zambrano back to form?

Carlos Zambrano went 8-0 with a 1.41 ERA in his last 11 outings of 2010 after anger management counseling, and said in spring training he was "cured." If he can start 2011 the way he ended 2010, his psychiatrist deserves a bonus.

Who's the real Matt Garza?

New acquisition Garza arguably had a worse spring (10.38 ERA) than Carlos Silva, who was released Sunday. Garza blamed the Arizona weather, saying he would welcome the moisture in the air once the team left the desert.

Are they fundamentally sound?

The Cubs talked about bunting so much in spring you would've thought it was their biggest deficiency in 2010. But their fielding was next to last in the National League, and most of the same position players return to their old spots.

Does a leadoff hitter matter?

Quade is going with Kosuke Fukudome, who has yet to become a consistent hitter. Baker leads off against lefties but has no speed. Unless the Cubs move Starlin Castro into the top spot, there always will be questions.

"Thank God cellphone cameras weren't invented yet."	"Thank goodness Juanita didn't treat me like Elin treated Tiger's car."	"I always felt like his mistress. The Ferrari—that was his true love."
2 What's the best part about baseball returning to Chicago?	Robert Redford. Let's hope the Cubs' bats also are on fire.	Opening Day here is like Groundhog Day—it means six more weeks of winter.	Turning on the radio and listening to Cubs games. Yep, I'm a sellout.	It brings warm weather along with it.	Oh, spring, the rebirth, the cycle of ... nah. Mediocrity returns. Hooray!
3 No baseball Opening Day is complete without ...	... Charlie Sheen to show the Cubs how much battiness it takes to easily get to first base.	... a Zambrano meltdown.	... Tuffy Rhodes. Still miss ya, man.	... hearing about a goofy public intoxication arrest at the ballpark.	... a Cubs loss amid sub-40-degree temperatures. Heaven. For some people.
4 Why are the Sox carrying only 11 pitchers to start the season?	So they can get a handle on Oney's Twitter feed.	The only people you see carrying more pitchers than that are running tabs in Wrigleyville.	It's the AL. They play by beer-league rules.	Ozzie is banking on heavy rotation. And by "banking on heavy rotation," I mean "feeling totally lazy."	Bobby Jenks used to count as two, so really it's the same amount as always.
5 Let's have your Final Four prediction.	You know what it is. Black and yellow, black and yellow. Black and yellow.	VCU loses to UConn, but look for Coach Smart's new endorsement deal: Shaka Hulu.	As you read this, I will be in Las Vegas. Prediction: pain.	The only four on my radar right now is shouting "fore!" in golf.	Butler beats VCU, then gets trounced by UConn. Butler coach mutters, "I need a better gig."

Boston's Shawn Thornton (left) reacts to being cut on the face Tuesday after a check by Blackhawks forward Fernando Pisani. REUTERS

Hawks, Bruins all talk—for now

Both of Shawn Thornton's wounds, apparently, still were fresh Thursday: The gash above the Bruins bruiser's eye that required 40 stitches to close, as well as the indignity suffered when the Blackhawks supposedly razed him as he left the ice Tuesday.

Thornton insinuated eventual payback to a Boston radio station, saying players "have fairly good memories." But he can forget about empathy from the offending party, especially after contending that the Hawks have more chirpers than most NHL clubs.

"He can say what he wants," Hawks enforcer John Scott said Thursday. "He's going after some of our littlest guys on our team to start a fight. He's trying to challenge [Fernando] Pisani to a fight. What's that say about him?"

"He's Mr. Tough Guy and he's trying to challenge Pisani. If I'm in the lineup, he's more than welcome to come chirp at me. I'll kick the [bleep] out of him."

It's the second time in a month the opposition has lodged such a complaint. Calgary's Brendan Morrison had a similar beef after a March 2 hit by the Hawks' Niklas

Sharp close to return

The Blackhawks will get one of their best players back next week, as they hoped.

Patrick Sharp, out since March 20 with an apparent leg injury, didn't practice Thursday. But coach Joel Quenneville said the team's leading goal-scorer is "progressing well" and remains on track to return before the regular season ends.

"We'll get a reassessment on Sunday and we could see him on the ice next week," Quenneville said.

Hjalmarsson.

"Everybody talks, everybody tries to get under each other's skin," Pisani said. "It's that time of year. Emotions are high. Guys are just trying to bring an edge to the game. I think on every team, there are always a few guys that do it, and that's part of the game—to try to agitate."

As for the unspoken code of conduct, Scott acknowledged he might not yak at someone gashed like Thornton, who, despite this incident, he labeled a "stand-up guy."

'Trust' WORTHY

They're on a break! David Schwimmer isn't doing a 'Friends' flick, but he is directing a new movie

Message received: "Trust" director David Schwimmer doesn't want to talk about "Friends."

That became clear as I asked him by phone (after questions about his new movie, of course) what his character, Ross Gellar, is doing right now. "I don't think about it," he said. I also told him that a sweater and a $2 inflatable monkey turned me into Ross for one Halloween.

He did not find this amusing. "Honestly, Matt, I get frustrated," Schwimmer said of continued talk about the TV comedy that made him a star. "I'm here talking about a film I spent a lot of my time and energy directing, and you're asking me about a Halloween costume ... It's frustrating for me when ['Friends'] keeps on surfacing. It was a great chapter of my life, and I'm forever grateful for it, but we ended the show six years ago."

I can't blame him. I'm also glad the 44-year-old Northwestern grad, who was raised in L.A. and now lives in New York, has something new on the big screen worth talking about. His second directorial effort, "Trust," opening Friday, is a huge step up from his previous work, 2007's "Run Fatboy Run."

In "Trust," which is set in the Chicago suburbs but filmed in Ann Arbor, Mich., for budgetary reasons, a father (Clive Owen) confronts feelings of helplessness and rage after his 14-year-old daughter (Chicago International Film Festival Best Actress winner Liana Liberato) falls victim to an online predator who lies about his age.

Considering Schwimmer, the co-founder of Lookingglass Theatre Company, has his first child with wife Zoe Buckman on the way, the issue of kids' online safety has gotta be weighing on him pretty heavily.

On the subject of trust and deception, what's the biggest lie you've ever told? Or most memorable?

The most memorable [He laughs] is probably when I was [about 10 years old] and I just hated a certain meal that my mom had cooked, and at that time she wanted us to just finish everything on our plates, and I refused to eat it. The whole family had finished the meal and left the table, and my mom had said to me, "Do not leave the table until you've eaten your food." And I surreptitiously wrapped my whole dinner in a paper towel and stuffed it in the bottom of a wastebasket and my mom later said, "Did you finish your meal?"

Did she ever find out the truth?

Oh, yeah, she knew. She was a lawyer, so she then produced the evidence and then said, "I know you weren't telling the truth." [Laughs.]

Was there a punishment?

Of course, of course. I was grounded without TV privileges or something for a week.

EVEN FASTER-PAISED

Trust (R)

With a baby on the way, how much more do you look at your own film and say, "Oh, man, these are tough issues?"

Oh, yeah. I mean, it's on my mind all the time. And even more so now as a parent-to-be. There are definitely things to be aware of in terms of how kids are socializing. Socializing is so different now than when I was a kid. I'm really interested in what I and others call "screen time." How much is the total screen time kids have a day? When I was growing up, it was maybe a little TV during the week and maybe some computer screen at computer class or something and going to a movie once every week or two. But now the screen time for kids is almost all-consuming. And I think a concern for me and other parents is, "How is this next generation going to really interact and socialize, and are they going to be able to have the same social skills that we all developed?"

Could you choose between having more confidence in your acting or directing skills?

Um, no, not really. I feel equally confident and equally inexperienced in both. I feel like I have a lot to learn in both areas ... I have so much to learn, as I said, but I try to push myself with each new thing I take on.

You've spent a lot of time in L.A., New York and Chicago. Which do you prefer?

Oh, that's tough. It's between Chicago and New York. New York's my home now, and I love the energy of the city, but the same could be said for Chicago. I love the people of Chicago a lot, and of course my theater company is my second family.

What are your preferred bars and restaurants to hit when you come back?

[Schwimmer takes a breath.]

That are not owned by Billy Dec.

Oh, well, that's tough. [Laughs.] I was gonna say, those are the ones I usually hit. Man, there's a lot. I like Avec; I was just there last time I was in town. I like, oh man, there's so many. I like the sushi at NoMi. Sometimes I like RL. I'm naming restaurants probably closer to the theater 'cause that's where I usually end up right after or before a show.

When was the last time the whole "Friends" cast got together to hang out?

Boy, I don't know. I really can't recall. We each have such divergent lives with families and work and everything. I keep in touch mostly with [Matt] LeBlanc. I love his new show—I don't know if you've checked it out yet—"Episodes;" it's fantastic. He's great in it. And he's coming to the premiere tonight I think of "Trust." I still maintain contact as much as I can. He shoots out in London, he lives in L.A., and I live in New York. So, you know, with everyone, it's tough.

A lot of TV shows are winding up on the big screen these days ...

Not going to happen.

I don't even need to finish the question. Zero percent chance?

Zero.

MORE WITH SCHWIMMER

ON "TRUST" BEING RATED R:

"The only reason it's rated R actually, 'cause there's more than two uses of the 'F' word. I mean, it's ridiculous to me. There's no nudity, there's no violence. It's just language. The hypocrisy of the rating system is really upsetting to me."

HIS NEXT LOOKINGGLASS WORK:

"I'm pitching something to the company; I'm proposing a play to direct for next year. It's a new play, I wish I could say the name, but it's not a done deal at all, and the playwright has asked that I don't let the cat out of the bag yet. But hopefully you'll hear soon."

OTHER MOVIES HE'S HOPING

TO DIRECT: "A few stories about Chicago, actually, about the history of Chicago. I'm working on an adaptation right now of a big American classic that I'm hoping to do ideally as a miniseries or a two- or three-part thing. It's quite epic in scope, so it'll probably never happen. It's so big and expensive, and it's a period piece, so we'll see. I'm determined to shoot in Chicago. I love the city."

Suspenseful thriller often veers off-track

One minute, Colter Stevens (Jake Gyllenhaal) awakes in someone else's body on a Chicago commuter train. Eight minutes later, the train blows up and Colter is in some kind of cold, remote vessel, speaking via computer to military officials (Vera Farmiga, Jeffrey Wright) demanding he get back to his mission: figuring out who bombed the train so he can prevent another attack. The bonus is that every time Colter returns to the train, he has another chat with Christina (Michelle Monaghan).

The buzz: Director Duncan Jones ("Moon") returns for another mind-bending mission of ever-shifting identities, driven by technology that doesn't currently exist (as far as we know). The script by Ben Ripley brings to mind everything from "Inception" and "Groundhog Day" to "Final Destination" and "The Adjustment Bureau."

The verdict: Jones is certainly carving himself a specific niche: ambitious and strange intellectual thrillers that raise numerous challenging ideas but don't actually analyze them. "Source Code," which continually switches between suspenseful and silly, doesn't have the transporting scenery of "Moon" or a lead performance with as much depth. The movie also has far too many near-endings; this didn't have to become a love story, and it really didn't have to throw its own logic out the window while maintaining a tunnel-vision sense of morality. Again, though, Jones makes us wonder, "What kind of world are we living in?" and "What kind of world do we think is possible?"

SUCKER PUNCH

@Dobey92: Sucker Punch was visually amazing for many reasons but still could have had a better story.
@BVAX: Sucker Punch : Not even hot chicks, awesome graphics and a good soundtrack could save this movie.

@Egspoony: Sucker Punch. It has layers. It has Escapeism. A gritty view of a woman's determination to not let abuse defeat her @Invisibleogre: Sucker Punch = Hot girls in a disappointing movie.

@NICK_COLOSIMO: i saw sucker-punch and it was great it is about time they make a action flick with hot women who kick a$$

@vincentanzalone: Sucker Punch: camp, bad acting, too slo-mo & lead made me feel like a pedophile but killer soundtrack and entertaining. 3/5 stars

@WillowTNR: SuckerPunch Hot chicks,cute outfits & cool fight sequences. Flimsy story, plot holes galore & bad acting, you may punch the screen

@vaughnchicago: "Sucker Punch" is like sugarless eye candy. It's visually interesting, but it's tasteless empty calories. No shock, no awe.

@Robbgodek: If Alice in Wonderland and Kill Bill Vol. 1 had a baby it would be Sucker Punch. Kinda disturbing but always pretty

OTHERS

@jnance2: Saw The Illusionist at @magicbox-theatre: Beautiful, funny, and sad. Everything you'd want in a French cartoon

@Mythos Chicago: 'Limitless' one of the greatest and most exciting movies that I have seen in years. Bradley Cooper killed it!

@Karriedowling: Paul was adorable & charming. Fun for SciFi movie geeks & SNL fans alike. Bill Hader's performance is astonishing.

@Kreepylady: I SAW THE DEVIL at the Music Box-Mesmerizing tale of revenge. Dark, unabashed scenes of brutality, yet quite funny at times

Hop (PG)

The heir to the title of Easter Bunny (voiced by Russell Brand) would rather be a drummer, so he runs away from Easter Island (seriously) to California, where unemployed Fred (James Marsden) lives with his parents. After the usual shrieking and recognition that he's encountered a talking rabbit who thinks he's Keith Moon, Fred sheepishly helps the critter, whose best attribute is the ability to poop jelly beans.

The buzz: Fortunately, director Tim Hill is an expert at blending zany human antics with hilarious CGI creatures, as evidenced by beloved films such as "Alvin and the Chipmunks" and "Garfield: A Tail of Two Kitties." And by "beloved," I mean "extremely irritating and painfully embarrassing for everyone involved."

The verdict: Skip, jump, run away, whatever! Do anything you have to do to avoid "Hop," which treats its plot like a formality and its young viewers like brainwashed twits who don't need jokes—just the mention of dreams and candy—to be entertained for a grueling 90 minutes. Kids surely will think the holiday of Easter signifies only the invention of chocolate, while adults will find it creepy that a single man in his mid-30s wants to be the Easter Bunny.

||||| 'The Music
Never Stopped' (PG)

Nearly 20 years after losing touch, Henry (J.K. Simmons) and Helen Sawyer (Cara Seymour) reunite with their son, Gabriel (Lou Taylor Pucci), after he's diagnosed with a brain tumor that prevents him from forming new memories. So while mom and dad try to reconnect with their son in 1986, their 35-year-old only child remembers nothing past 1970.

The verdict: Gabriel has virtually no short-term memory, but put away the "50 First Dates" comparisons. "The Music Never Stopped" succeeds on the shoulders of Simmons ("Up in the Air," "Juno"), who's fantastically moving when Henry familiarizes himself with his son's favorite music as the lone remaining way to connect with him.

Byrne is scary busy

Newsday

Rose Byrne's Aussie accent can take you by surprise.

Like most Australian actors, she's a master at hiding the "G'day mate" twang when playing American Ellen Parsons, that striving attorney who battles wits with Glenn Close on TV's "Damages," or Renai, an all-American wife and mother terrified by the strange goings-on at her new home in the horror film "Insidious."

That film, opening Friday, comes from director James Wan and screenwriter Leigh Whannell, the team that dreamed up the "Saw" franchise. "Insidious" pays homage to classic haunted-house films like "Poltergeist" and "The Amityville Horror."

Now living in Manhattan, Byrne, 31, soon will be seen in "Bridesmaids" (with "Saturday Night Live's" Kristen Wiig), "X-Men: First Class" and the fourth season of "Damages."

Are you a horror buff?

I loved horror as a child. I'd make my mother rent "Nightmare on Elm Street," "Creepshow" and "Halloween." There's something about being scared. This isn't new—people have said it before—but it's true. It's so fun. And really cathartic, which is even stranger. I was so ruffled after I saw "Insidious." Then, oddly relaxed. It's like ... you're tense watching it, and then ... OK, I can breathe now.

Byrne in 'Damages'
FX PHOTO

Have you caught the "Saw" films?

Ohhh, no. I can't do torture. Not at all. It's like those scary things in Iraq. I mean, it's part of life, I guess, but I don't like to watch it.

But "Insidious" you could handle.

The script was definitely eerie. These guys are masters. But it's more psychological. And when you're shooting scenes day by day, you can't really conceptualize it all. You could feel it was heavy and weird, though.

How's working with Glenn Close?

Working with Glenn, who's so respected, that was intimidating initially. But she's actually ... fantastic. She's a hard worker, smart with breaking down scenes and dialogue. She sets a great standard. And she's really sweet. We've become friends.

And Kristen Wiig—were you cracking up all the time shooting "Bridesmaids?"

She's funny, yeah ... but she's not a maniac. She's not "on" all the time. She's actually quite shy, I think. It was very unique to do a film with all women. It was really ... radical. I've never done that before.

WAGNER

Coronations, poisonings, bribery, conspiracies, lusty warriors and family squabbles. April TV is teeming with royal treachery, high treason and devious machinations—and that's just William and Kate's royal wedding April 29 (which will be broadcast by everyone, it seems).

Seriously, though, a bunch of kings, queens and pretenders—not to mention a plotting pope—will do battle in three extravagant costume dramas coming to TV this month.

The pageantry kicks off Friday with "Camelot," the Starz update of King Arthur and the Knights of the Round Table that takes a lusty look at how the young farmer Arthur becomes king of England. On Sunday, Showtime jumps into the fray with "The Borgias," a pseudo-historical tale in which Jeremy Irons chews scenery as Rodrigo Borgia, the Spanish cardinal who schemed his way to becoming Pope Alexander VI in the 15th century. On April 17, HBO delivers "Game of Thrones," its adaptation of George R.R. Martin's "A Song of Ice and Fire" fantasy novels about royals feuding over power.

If a royal ruckus isn't your thing, there are plenty of other new series, mini-series movies and specials premiering this month. One of the best is AMC's crime drama "The Killing" (see Page 31).

Camelot 9 p.m. Friday, Starz

How do you give a new spin to the legend of King Arthur and his sorcerer mentor, Merlin, which has been done so many times in movies, books, plays and on TV? If your Merlin is being played by Joseph Fiennes, you ditch all the traditional trappings of a medieval magician.

"I just wanted to have fun and get away from the cloak and the staff and long, long beard and the pointy hat," Fiennes said of his take on Merlin, the puppetmaster who, when English King Uther is murdered, blocks the rise to power of his evil daughter, Morgan (Eva Green), by crowning as king Uther's secret son, Arthur (Jamie Campbell Bower).

"I felt Merlin kind of has this Machiavellian, bipolar way that he's not to be trusted, yet he is fighting for this great seat of power and is the master to some degree in orchestrating Camelot and King Arthur.

"He's a strange, dark, devious character."

Fiennes

The Borgias 8 p.m. Sunday, Showtime

David Oakes can't complain about his latest job starring as the 15th-century party animal Juan Borgia. In "The Borgias," Juan, the middle son of corrupt Pope Alexander VI (Jeremy Irons), gets into street fights, partakes in wine-soaked baths with numerous women and, to help his dad become and remain pope, bribes priests and kills many enemies. "He loves a good time," Oakes said recently from England. "He loves to party. He loves to drink and he loves women and, well, there is not much wrong with that really, is there?"

Game of Thrones

8 p.m. April 17, HBO

The much-anticipated series "Game of Thrones," which has been in the works since 2006, propels HBO into a fantasy world with which it's not too familiar. But it's getting help from actors well-known in the genre, including Sean Bean, who played Boromir in Peter Jackson's "Lord of the Rings" trilogy; Lena Headey, who starred as Queen Gorgo in "300;" and Peter Dinklage, who played Trumpkin in "Chronicles of Narnia: Prince Caspian." I've watched a few episodes of the series, and think HBO has nailed the tale with an epic scope and brooding cinematic feel.

'The Killing' gives Enos a role to die for

By Curt Wagner

REDEYE

Let's call "The Killing" deliberate, not slow, so as to not scare away viewers accustomed to the murder-of-the-week style of most criminal procedurals.

"CSI" this is not. It's so much better.

"I just thought it was one of the most beautiful pieces of storytelling I had read in any genre in years," said the show's star, Mireille Enos. "It was so cinematic and thoughtful, and paced so slowly, which is a gift in TV."

"The Killing" follows with meticulous detail a Seattle police probe into the brutal murder of teen Rosie Larsen. Executive producer Veena Sud, who based her chilling whodunit on the wildly popular Danish drama "Forbrydelsen," structured the tale so that each of the 13 episodes represents roughly one day in the investigation.

Enos plays Det. Sarah Linden, a veteran investigator who is handed the case the day she's supposed to leave Seattle and move with her son to California to get married. But like the drug addicts she later will interview, Sarah can't pass up the case.

She would be giving up on Rosie—and on her devastated parents, Stan (Brent Sexton) and Mitch (Michelle Forbes). So she takes her kid to a friend's, offers excuses to her fiance and partners up with her replacement, Stephen Holder (Joel Kinnaman). As she and Stephen dig deeper, they uncover connections to a local politician (Billy Campbell), Rosie's schoolmates and others.

"I think this is a person who is capable of stepping over the line into that world of addiction where she can't walk away," Enos said. "Sure, it's about the case and it's about being responsible to the dead, but it's also about what she's getting out of it—her own sense of making her life worth something."

Enos, most recently seen portraying twin sisters Jodeen and Kathy Marquart on "Big Love," is making a full life for herself. She's married to actor Alan Ruck, who spent years on such Chicago stages as the Wisdom Bridge Theatre before playing Cameron Frye in "Ferris Bueller's Day Off." They had their first child together, daughter Vesper Vivianne, in September.

"I think the fact that it all happened at the same time isn't an accident," she said. "That my daughter showed up and this amazing part showed up and my life is so full, it feels like it's all of a piece ..."

"It's going really great."

Brunch at Sprout
1417 W. Fullerton Ave.
773-348-0706

!!!! Already hot
Brunch hours:
10:30 a.m.-2:30 p.m. Sunday
Reservations: Recommended

Entrees are brunch classics done Dale-style, while side dishes at the bottom of the menu are best treated as appetizers, "a la frushi, but 10 times better," Levitski said, referring to the brunch starters he coined at the first location of Orange in 2001. I sat down Sunday to see if Levitski can still rock the brunch beat 10 years later.

We fall for Dale Levitski's brunch at Sprout

By Lisa Arnett

After Dale Levitski got the boot on "Top Chef All-Stars," which wrapped Wednesday on Bravo, he started development in earnest for his Sunday brunch at Lincoln Park restaurant Sprout. But he's been thinking about it for even longer.

Some dishes, such as the crab hush-puppy-wrapped skirt steak and Caesar salad omelet, he had on paper for Town & Country, the restaurant concept he planned (and eventually scrapped) after placing runner-up in the third season of "Top Chef." And then there's the brioche with chocolate butter and lemon curd, which came to him at 3 a.m. the morning before his first brunch service.

SERVER SAYS ...

... everything's amazing, but the skirt steak and eggs ($17) is especially tasty, and the oatmeal ($9) is one of the best but least-ordered dishes on the menu.

I SAY ...

... it would have been easy to overlook the oatmeal, and even Levitski acknowledges that. "Oatmeal is one of those things that, on a menu at a restaurant, you would consider a cop-out," he said. "Like, 'Oh fine, we'll offer oatmeal for the boring people or the tree huggers or whatever.'" But boring is the last thing I'd call this oatmeal, seared to a cake-like consistency and served with creme fraiche, poached carrots, oat granola and a marmalade of mandarinquats, a hybrid fruit crossing orange with kumquat.

As for the skirt steak, it's seared first, dunked in crab-studded hush-puppy batter and then fried. With a sunny-side-up egg on top and a Vietnamese-inspired fingerling potato salad below (courtesy of sous chef and fellow "Top Chef" cheftestant Sara Nguyen), it's like nothing I've had before.

IT'S WORTH A RETURN TRIP TO ...

... try the menu's many other dishes. With 12 entrees and nearly as many sides, I couldn't help but feel that my table's two entrees and two sides hardly made a dent in what Levitski has to offer. Next on my to-eat list: the malted Belgian waffle with strawberry-rhubarb compote, marcona almonds, basil, oven-dried goat cheese and Black Dog's goat cheese gelato ($12), and the croque madame ($12) made with a rosemary ham-stuffed version of the grilled cheese sandwich that's netted raves on Sprout's dinner menu.

No-kid zone?

Levitski's recent comments to Time Out Chicago and The Feast that Sprout's brunch is adults-only in stroller-laden Lincoln Park spurred quite the online debate, including dozens of comments on Huffington Post. Here's what he had to say about the uproar:

"I think a lot of that got blown out of proportion as me being this anti-child Nazi kind of person. Our main dining room is small; if we put highchairs and strollers in there, it's honestly a fire hazard. ... And it's just not the type of place

I CAN'T STOP THINKING ABOUT ...

... the Lithuanian bacon buns ($7). Traditionally called lasineciai, these bacon-stuffed beauties served with black sea salt-sprinkled vanilla butter are Levitski's homage to the traditional lasineciai that his Lithuanian and Russian father would buy. Even though Levitski's brunch is only two weeks old, I understand why he already sees the buns becoming a signature: They're a crazy kind of delicious.

DAY-DRINKING

The cocktail list, which Levitski created with the help of roommate (and bartender at Maude's and Gilt Bar) Zach Friedlander, holds its own next to the food, from a banana-garnished tequila-coffee-horchata creation called the Curious Jorge to the perfectly balanced Afternoon Delight, a basil-fennel-raspberry-flavored prosecco creation. Look for more cocktails joining the lineup starting this weekend, including "bugey-mosas" made with bugey, a sparkling rose wine.

BOTTOM LINE

With many more dishes to try and no end to Levitski's innovation in sight, I can see making an excuse to brunch here for special occasions, ordinary Sundays and pretty much whenever I'm in the neighborhood.

for kids to come in to brunch. I'm not insulting anyone's parenting abilities or a child's ability to sit still, but we honestly can't really fit them in our restaurant. That's what I was going for, and all of a sudden it became this ideological soccer-mom-with-a-keyboard debate. If anything, I'm flattered by the attention, that people care, but I meant no insult. There's PG-13 movies, there's rated-R, there's different grades of where you can go at what age—and when we grew up, those things were definitely more enforced than they are today. One of the most surprising things [besides] a little angry backlash here and there, 95 percent of people, even parents, are saying thank you."

Fries matter

Hoyt's Chicago, the new Loop eatery inside Hotel 71 and just steps away from the Chicago River, fancies itself a "modern American tavern." To the fine folks at Hoyt's, "tavern" seems to mean presenting nearly everything on cumbersome slabs of wood. Exceptions: Some items, from house-made pickles to berry-topped chocolate pudding for dessert, come in quaint glass jars. But to be frank, I have little concern for such details. I only have eyes for the menu's single burger ($14), served at lunch and dinner.

The burger: A half-pound patty of Angus beef was appropriately juicy and cooked to the requested medium-rare.

The bun: The brioche bun struck a nice balance between fluffy and hefty, but a tomato slice nearly as thick as the patty above it risked decimating the lower bun. Luckily, though the bread compressed significantly, it did not reach a dire state of LBD (lower bun disintegration).

The fixings: The accompanying aged cheddar, bacon strips and aforementioned jar of pickles were all of good quality, but I was especially taken with the wonderfully sweet and crunchy onion rings stacked on top.

Everything else: Though presented in a rather adorable miniature metal pail and wrapped in Hoyt's logo paper, the "crispy manchego truffle fries" were hardly crispy, and scant shreds of cheese added little flavor.

Burgerelli's bottom line: For $14, I expect the whole plate to be perfection. Give me a better batch of fries, and you've won me over.

Rock 'n' Vote

HEY, BANDS: LAST CALL!

Here at RedEye/Metromix, we love our Chicago bands. The problem: There are so many great local artists that readers don't know enough about.

Once again, we're putting on our 8th annual Rock 'n' Vote show to change that. So, local bands, this is your big opportunity to increase your exposure, and all we need from you is your demo (music, bio and anything else you've got). We'll pick our top 10 submissions, and then Metromix readers will listen to the finalists and vote for their favorites. The top vote-getters will headline a free concert May 4 at Hard Rock Cafe. (The winning band also scores a headlining performance at Hard Rock Cafe during the next music season.)

Send submissions (music, color hi-res photos, etc.) to mpais@tribune.com by

Monday and show us why you rock!

Oh, and by the way: One lucky concertgoer will win a trip to London courtesy of Hard Rock Cafe. —MATT PAIS

BOY bond

Pete Wentz, Travie McCoy talk touring, tattoos, trust

By Luis Arroyave

CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Pete Wentz didn't seem to mind opening for rapper Travie McCoy at Metro last Friday. Sure, Wentz is used to headlining larger venues with Fall Out Boy, but he's not in Fall Out Boy anymore (at least not at the moment). He's now in Black Cards, the band he started last year with female vocalist Bebe Rexha.

For Wentz, a Wilmette native, McCoy's tour will give his lesser-known band exposure. For McCoy, the Gym Class Heroes frontman headlining his first U.S. tour as a solo artist, it's an opportunity to repay the friend who gave him his big break.

The two musicians met in June 2004 after a mutual friend passed along Gym Class Heroes' album to Wentz, who had just started his Decaydance record label. The band's alt-hip-hop sound caught Wentz by surprise, especially because he was used to being handed demos that all sounded the same, and he met with McCoy and Gym Class Heroes guitarist Matt McGinley before a Fall Out Boy show in Buffalo, N.Y.

"Pete came in a dressing room and gave me the up and down," said McCoy, 29, sitting backstage with Wentz hours before their show at Metro. "He eyeballed me and tried to gauge me."

Wentz said the up-and-down scan had more to do with McCoy's 6-foot-5 frame than anything else. "It's weird when you're a short dude," said Wentz, 31, who stands about 5-foot-8. "You have to take a step back to get the whole picture. I need to step on an apple box just to hang out with him."

Wentz signed Gym Class Heroes to his label that fall and had them open for Fall Out Boy on tour.

Over the years, Wentz and McCoy became close and have collaborated on songs (McCoy appeared on Fall Out Boy's 2008 single "What a Catch, Donnie"), an art show (at Gallery 1988 in Los Angeles in 2008), music videos (Wentz made a cameo in McCoy's 2010 clip for "Billionaire")—even tattoos (they got ink together—McCoy's saying "Young Hearts" and Wentz's "Be Free").

"One of the most fun times I've ever had was when he stayed at my house for two weeks [in 2008] and we just started doing art out of nowhere," Wentz said. "There was definitely a point when ..."

"You almost killed me?" McCoy said.

Wentz didn't deny it. He said he lit rubber cement on fire because he thought it would look really cool, which led to a larger-than-expected fire. Meanwhile, McCoy was taking a nap at the time and woke up to flames near his feet.

"My first instinct was to jump up and push him out of the way," McCoy said. "I grabbed a blanket and threw it on the fire. The whole time I'm like, 'What the [bleep] are you thinking?'"

When it came time for Wentz to choose a godfather for his son, Bronx, later that year, he narrowed his options to McCoy and Cobra Starship singer Gabe Saporta before deciding on McCoy.

"I figured Bronx needed Travis just as much as Travis needed Bronx," Wentz said. "Travis, under it all, is really a sensitive dude. I know having something like that in his life will make his life important, make him keep chugging ahead when he has hard times."

McCoy went through a public breakup with pop star Katy Perry and, like Wentz, has battled with drugs and depression. He said he often has turned to Wentz, who is going through a public divorce himself with pop star Ashlee Simpson, to help him through. "He's someone I can talk to about things and not feel judged," McCoy said.

Although McCoy is having success as a solo artist ("Billionaire," off his 2010 solo debut, "Lazarus," reached No. 4 on the Billboard Hot 100 songs chart), he said a new Gym Class Heroes album is in the works and could be out by the summer.

A new Fall Out Boy album? That's a different story. The band members are working on separate projects. The potentially good news for Fall Out Boy fans is that Wentz feels the bandmates are getting along better these days.

"It's the time apart and space," Wentz said. "And we're now in a position where we have creative outlets and aren't in each other's way."

Travis, under it all, is really a sensitive dude."

QUESTION OF THE WEEK

Britney's new sing-talk/auto-tune album: Flop or fabulous? Why?
Here are some answers we liked from Twitter and Facebook. Follow @mmxmusic and watch for next week's question!

TWITTER

@LiaSimcina

FAB! Album is meant to make u dance, & no one beats Britney at that! Props to her for joining the electronic movement!

@Goromanet

flop... No Rebecca Black - Friday remix?!?

@EvenMorePosh

Brit is queen of auto-tune, and shes amazing. She is what she is-a pop star.. doesn't pretend she can sing (ahem katy perry)

@veryvogue

I personally love

it! I look forward to driving around in warm weather with the Windows down blasting new Britney!

@justinyourmind

The album? Fantastic! Her performing/dancing? Weekend at Bernie's.

FACEBOOK

Courtney Ivo

Floptastic. She needs to hang it up, its Gagas world now.

Nic Lawson

Total Flop - Britney is trying to hard to keep up with Top 100 Hits and her music is continuing to sound alike and unoriginal.

Mark Gustafson ?

"On the album's "deluxe edition" (which features 16 tracks as opposed to the regular edition's 12), 22 individual songwriters are cited. Spears herself is not among them. There are over a dozen producers"

Nate Malchow

I like it. it's an extreme guilty pleasure... consistent album which I like as well

Christopher Johnston

She is providing what her audience wants. She is not making standards, or torch songs, she is making bubble gum pop with slutty overtones. Perfect for the dance floor, and future karaoke performances. But, nobody is gonna be remaking this crap in 20 years, and nobody will be making "Gasoline" their wedding song. It's chart filler.

Tim McDaniel

Flop. It's time for this untalented, over-glorified backup dancer to hang it up. Her dance routines have gotten pathetic, and she still doesn't seem live. Complete lack of talent.

Amanda Polowniak

Total flop. At this point, I wouldn't be surprised if she announces she's doing a duet with Rebecca Black.

Ronnie Vanna

If every generation passes their music on to the next, I weep for the future. When MTV made music a visual concept, we witnessed the death of music as art. Brittney is just a by product and just like fast food the masses will eat up.

Cheryl Durlak

Zombie woman.

Lizzie Sky

Britney who?! Gaga definitely reins upon the world of pop. Britney was never one of my favorites, and won't ever be. Her songs lack depth and quickly run dry.

Lori Hansen Wendte

I have been a Britney fan forever. With each new album I hope for the best, but she just keeps disappointing me. If she would write her own music, or at least co-write some she could make herself relevant again. Now that she isn't dancing like she used to she has absolutely no excuse to not sing live. I will not shell out $100 again to see her not connect with an audience and listen to her CD play.

Rap battle

Who's bringing more crazy to Chicago—Nicki Minaj or Lil Wayne?

By Ariel Alexovich | REDEYE

Two of hip-hop's top artists will tear up the United Center on Friday night, and if you didn't score tickets, you're missing out. Lil Wayne and Nicki Minaj are top-selling musicians, but they also rank pretty high on the crazy meter. Whether she's wearing a skintight leopard-print leotard or simulating a lap dance onstage (as she did during their New York concert last Sunday), Minaj and her Young Money labelmate know how to put on a show. In fact, the duo even recorded a track called "I Get Crazy," so if they didn't bring it, we'd be disappointed. Which artist is more outrageous? It's a tough call, but we break it down.

HAIR

☒ Minaj: Wears it pink, blue, straight, curly, down and up—sometimes all at the same time.

☐ Wayne: Long dreads

WINNER: Minaj. Though she'd be disqualified if wigs were exempted.

TATTOOS

☐ Has one arm tattoo she got at age 16—which she tells Billboard "I wish I never got."

☒ Tats cover most of his body, including his eyelids, which say "Fear God."

WINNER: Wayne. Face tattoos are a bold move, bro.

CRIMINAL RECORD

☐ Squeaky clean.

☒ Spent eight months in jail in 2010 on weapons charges.

WINNER (if you can call it that): Wayne. You're not outrageous if the cops don't care what you do.

PETS

☐ Offered $50,000 for the return of her lost pink monkey, Oscar. "OSK!!!! OSK!!!! Plz come back!!!!" she tweeted.

☒ Told Interview magazine he keeps two sharks at his house. "Those are my dudes," he said.

WINNER: Wayne, because the calmer you are about your crazy, the more crazy you seem.

SAMPLE OUT-THERE SONG LYRIC

☐ "You're no match for my Uzi." ("Baddest [Bleep]")

☒ "My head is the dumbest, I promise. I should be hooked on phonics." ("Every Girl")

WINNER: Wayne, though we couldn't print most of either artist's lyrics here.

HOW THEY "GO GREEN"

☒ Styled her beehive to look half-cauliflower, half-broccoli.

☐ Whipped up a Packers-friendly "Green and Yellow" remix response to Wiz Khalifa's Steelers tune, "Black and Yellow."

WINNER: Minaj. We repeat: Vegetable hair.

OVERALL WINNER

Lil Wayne, although perhaps only by Charlie Sheen standards is this really "winning."

They're going home

There was no rescue drama this week. America voted, and Naima Adedapo (far left) and Thia Megia (right) were sent home on the "American Idol" vote-off

Thursday. One week after being saved by the judges, Casey Abrams was safe—not even in the bottom three. FOXPHOTOS

Fire on an island

Now this is dedication. Arcade Fire, which has raised more than $1 million in Haiti earthquake relief, performed a surprise show in Port-au-Prince this week, according to rollingstone.com. The Canadian band played its own material, plus covers of the Rolling Stones, Cyndi Lauper and Creedence Clearwater Revival. Sounds like a party!

Even more Madea

Hope you like Madea (left). Tyler Perry has agreed with Lionsgate to make at least two more movies starring the ill-tempered character, variety.com reported Thursday. That's in addition to "Madea's Big Happy Family," which drops April 22. What can we say? America loves seeing Perry in drag.

Senior prankster

Does Betty White (left) ever slow down? No, and we wouldn't want her to. The 89-year-old comedian will host and executive-produce "Betty White's Off Their Rockers" for NBC, a hidden-camera comedy show in which senior citizens prank unsuspecting young people, deadline.com reports. This could be epic.

THE DIGIT

85%

That's how much Steve Carell's departure will contribute to the downfall of "The Office," Rainn Wilson said in an interview with New York Magazine. The additional 15 percent will lead to "brilliant re-creation," he said.

Cameron Diaz (right) says things weren't awkward at all between her and ex-flame Justin Timberlake (above) when they filmed the comedy "Bad Teacher." "Justin and I have always had a good laugh together," Diaz told usmagazine.com. "There really was no one else who was more perfect for this part." GETTY IMAGESPHOTOS
